The other side of the Medal.

We are the richest people in the world, and we grow riober every day. The revenue returns for the last quarter are eminently satisfactory Mr. Gladstone is at once like and unlike the old Je wish false prophets who prophesied only smooth things . for though he prophesies what is smooth; things generally turn out even more emosth than his vationations promise. He took off five millions of taxation by his last budget, expecting that the increased consumption of the untaxed articles would restore a million and a quarter to the revenue. At this rate, during the last nine months the actual revenue would have been diminished he rather more than £2,800,000. But such has been our commercial presperity that the revenue has lost only about £1,100,000 daring where large ships dari be at anohor. Rent modethese prosperous months. During the in t quarter | rate, the recovery of the actual returns has been even more striking. The increase in the consumption of tea has been very great. In 1864 we consumed above eighty-one million pounds, in 1865 above ninety-one millions. What a picture of wealth have we hera! What gigantic products of the loom, the mine, and the forge. What vast fortunes reaped by merchants, manufacturers, and shipowners! What an amount of wages paid to mechanics and all sorts of employees ! Who can wonder at the splendours of Rotten Row, at the crowds that exush in the ante-chambers at a Royal leves or drawing-room, at the auparh achemia, of Lord Westminster for-adding fresh splendours to his territory in Belgravia ? Happy are the people the sum total of whose wealth is so immense. Let us turn to the other side of the medal. On the day that these glowing statistics were published, a London incumbant published the atory of one of his parishioners, which may he summed un in a very few words. Seven human beings, the husband, his sick wife, their eldest daughter (too ill to earn her brend), andfour little shildren. Offices. Stubles and Goldawis. had been living for aix whole weeks in one room, right fact by ten feet in dimensions, without either had or bed-clothes of any description. Their furnitors had been seized for arrears of rent, which they could not pay, being obliged to find weekly instalments for direcharging a debt al expenses of the husband's mother. who had died in the beginning of the year. This old woman had subscribed to three burial clubs. in order to pay for her own funeral, but they had all become bankrupt before she died, Set this story against the revenue returns of 1865. and draw the moral. Nicety million bounds of tea, on the one hand; consumed by those who could pay for it; six weeks of half-starvation pussed through by seven people, without a parti-cle of bed or hedding, in a room about nine feet square. Yet it was only at the end of the six weeks that they made application to bir. biartin, the clargyman who tells the tale. And this is only one case out of thousands. The feature of the bankruptcy of the three burial blube ought to suggest to men and women of practical benevolence the importance of extending as far as possithe in London the Friendly Society system asranctioned by Act of Parliament, in apposition to those ill-managed clubs which meet at public. Austria appears to be suffering from the threes of a great domestic struggle-the syldences of which are patent from the recent treaty which has i been contracted between that Empire and this country. It is a stop in the right direction, and will tend to remove political distrust and also commercial icalousy. More backward as regards population-and resources than any other Europenn State, there is no greater field for wealth and prosperity than that which Austria presents.
